This version of Lao Zi's Dao De Jing gives one line of information for each word in the Chinese text. It reads from top to bottom, like the Chinese original. This is a more advanced and difficult text and is intended for more careful (and slower) study of the Chinese text's broader meanings, deliberate ambiguities and translation choices, and even then only a few paragraphs at a time.

The idea for a multi-dimensional translation grew out of a recommendation made to a friend that he not try to grasp Lao Zi by reading one favorite translation but to pick at least three versions and "add them together" to "broaden" the words. The "one word, one line" idea came later, and seemed to allow adequate breadth to cover the more important options. Several years after an earlier version of this edition was first published Jonathan Star developed a translation in this format as well.

The information in the matrix is organized into seven columns (refer to the first page of the Matrix itself) with the alternative English words being the sixth. Following is a guide to the various kinds of information given in each column.

1) Far left. Chapter numbers and clause identification tags. As mentioned before these are largely for reference. They are the same in the simple translation.

2) This column gives the Pinyin transliteration of the Chinese character. A few of these characters have alternative pronunciations, according to the intended meaning, so two different spellings here may refer to the same character. The Pinyin system only recently replaced the Wade-Giles system as the standard for transcription. This is the reason that Peking came to be spelled Beijing, Lao Tzu became Lao Zi and Tao Te Ching became Dao De Jing. For readers unfamiliar with Pinyin, the systems are compared at the end of the Glossary. If this word is underlined it means that there are others versions of the text which use different characters. These may be seen in the section to follow, "Common Variations in the Text" .

3) This four-digit number is the character's entry number in Harvard's Mathew's Chinese English Dictionary, 1993, which is organized alphabetically, but in the Wade-Giles system. This was only one of twelve dictionaries used in this project. Four of the words used in the Dao De Jing were left out of this dictionary (see 11c, 39n, 55h & 55j). These were assigned numbers in the 8010's. If you are reading this in an electronic format, use this four digit number in conjunction with the Find command to track the occurrences of a word throughout the text, or as a concordance. If this number is underlined this is the first occurrence of a word which also appears in the main Glossary.

4) This column contains one of two kinds of numbers. If this is the first appearance of the character in the text, the number will contain a plus + sign. The number found before the plus sign gives the conventional number of this character's "radical" or root component. The number after the sign gives the number of additional strokes added to the radical (plus or minus a stroke since some people count differently). This is the way many Chinese dictionaries are accessed. This will not work in a "modern" dictionary with simplified characters, and where many of the classical characters were edited out of the language itself. If the character has already appeared in the text the number in this column gives the location of the character's first entry or appearance.

5) This column gives the location of the character's next appearance. This is meant to take the place of a concordance, so that the use of a word can be traced throughout the book. The letter "F" in this column means that this is the Final occurrence of the word. The letters "HL" indicate that the word is an Hapax Legomenon (in the broader sense), a word used only once in this version of the Dao De Jing.

6) This column offers a varying number of alternative English translations of the Chinese word as the word is shaped by this specific context. This is not simply an insertion of dictionary definitions. Commas and slashes here usually separate interchangeable alternatives, while semicolons tend to separate syntactic or grammatical options. Words in parentheses are either alternative modifiers, or optional in an English rendering, or strictly inferred English grammar, or indicators of a specific facet of an English word. Up and Down arrows (^v) indicate that the word order may be reversed in the English translation. An Up arrow before a word indicates that a word from below in the Matrix may be placed before this word in the translation. Asterisks (*) as in Part A refer to the Footnotes at the end of Part A.

7) At the far right, in cases where a phrase or statement is repeated elsewhere in the Dao De Jing, a number will give the location of the phrase's next occurrence, with ditto marks below to indicate the extent of the phrase. At the last occurrence the number is the location of the first occurrence. In addition to phrases and sayings traced in this column there are a number of phrases, idioms and other word combinations which are used throughout the book. The more important of these are listed and traced in the Glossary at "Phrases and Idioms" .

As mentioned earlier, there are many variations between the various older and accepted versions of the text, and choices must be made. The bulk of this version follows the text associated with Wang Bi's commentary (226-249 c.e.). But there are several other major texts. That of Heshang Gong, another version with appended commentary, is of uncertain date, but speculation seems to center around Wang Bi's time (plus or minus centuries). A version known as the Fu Yi text was discovered in a grave in 574 c.e. and dates from around the beginning of the Han Dynasty (206 b.c.e.). Fu Yi (556-639 c.e.) published the text along with his own commentary. Two more (not identical) manuscripts were entombed in 168 b.c.e. at Mawangdui and remained undiscovered until 1973. They were unearthed in 1976. These two (known simply as texts a & b) were written in an older script (gu wen), probably in the very early Han, and contain the largest number of textual variants, in addition to both of them reversing the book's two parts and a few of the chapter sequences. Although much survived, significant portions of these texts, written on silk, were deteriorated and illegible. The latest market fashion has been to assume that the Mawangdui manuscripts are more reliable simply due to their age, but evidence exists to suggest that modifications were made for political ends and some of this enthusiasm is already beginning to pass. Still the texts are quite valuable, especially where they corroborate another version of the text or settle long-standing debates about whether a particular passage was added centuries later. While I have generally followed Wang Bi's version I have made adjustments where there exists substantial agreement at variance with Wang Bi, most often where the Mawangdui texts concur with the Heshang Gong or Fu Yi versions. All of these adjustments are identified at the end of the Matrix in a section called Common Variations in the Text. Their existence is indicated in the Matrix by underlining in Column Two, the Pinyin transcription of the words in question.

Yet another text, currently known as the Guodian version, was discovered in 1993 and released in 1998. It was written on bamboo strips in the older style of writing and is said to date from before 300 b.c.e., making this much older than any other known versions. The content, relative to all other received versions of the text, is both divergent in characters and severely truncated. Claims that this find supports the theory that the Dao De Jing is an accretional text, compiled over many decades, if not centuries, are being reexamined in light of this new discovery. While I have no particular problem with this notion, and regardless of the certainty of this version's great antiquity, I personally am too suspicious of the lineage or "breeding" of this version to use it with any confidence in settling the kind of questions for which I found the MWD texts useful.

In only a few places an adjustment has been made to the most accepted versions of chapter and line parsing. These changes are indicated by underlining in Column One and also discussed in the Common Variations section.

Index to GuoDian Chu Bamboo Slips

Following Two Pages

per Robert Henricks' Lao Tzu's Tao Te Cheng, 0-231-11816-3

Units should have been assigned colors instead of numbers, as no specific order is implied. "Position" is the only sure order -- within a unit. And there is no positive assurance there were no slips lost after the "L" last slip of a unit. (DDJ16 might be an example.)

This index was prepared by Larry (Lare, Mo4) Moore
